IATA remarks on the modernization of the Russian aviation industry

Posted: 07 Nov 2011 01:59 PM PST

For more than 60 years, the International Air Transport Association (IATA) has developed the commercial standards that built a global aviation industry. Today, IATA represents, leads and serves the airline industry. Its members comprise some 230 airlines - the world's leading passenger and cargo airlines among them - representing 93 percent of scheduled international air traffic.

IATA General and CEO Tony Tyler was a keynote speaker at the 2011 EU-Russia Aviation Summit in St. Petersburg. In an interview with Modern Russia, Tyler talks about the Russia-Europe relationship, safety in the aviation industry and the modernization of Russia's infrastructure.

Continued privatization, diversification key to success

Posted: 07 Nov 2011 01:45 PM PST

Leading investment experts recently met to discuss the current state of Russian financial markets at the Russia Business and Investment Summit (RBIS) at the New York Stock Exchange. The panel included representatives of Barclays Capital, BNY Mellon and MICEX, who all agreed that with certain reforms and further privatization, Russia will continue to develop as an attractive market for both foreign and domestic investment.

Importance of privatization
